

CARAVAN TO MIDNIGHT – JOHN B. WELLS INTERVIEW ROB KIRBY – EPISODE 477

PUBLISHED FEBRUARY 15, 2016

John B:

All right, Mr. Kirby returns to Caravan to midnight. He has a degree in Economics at York University in Toronto, 15 years of institutional appropriate experience on Bay Street in Toronto, where he has a specialty: Foreign Exchange, bank Euro Dollar deposit market, interest rate derivatives, and US and Canadian Government bonds. and as I mentioned before he came on, and as I mentioned before he came on, we don't have markets anymore, we only have market interventions. So says Mr. Kirby, welcome back Rob, good to see you.

Rob K:

Nice to be with you John.

John B:

I would like to ask you this questions, how is it that we, I mean is there any cause for alarm when you go to your favorite real-time market site, and you see, wow look at that, it's all in the red, look at Europe, it's all in the red, everything is in the red. Let's look at Asia and they are in the "toilette" also. and then the next day everybody is in the green, what causes this crazy level of fluctuation?

Rob K:

In my view John, what we are witnessing is we are witnessing symptoms of a much bigger and deeper problem. It's the surface and specifically, my work tells me that our monetary fiat system is breaking down. Credit, and/or money creation, reflected back in the late double "0"s, in the 2007-08 time period, and money creation or credit creation has gone vertical, rates were forced to "0" to allow this ramp-up of credit or debt and this really represented monetary shock therapy and it was all instituted using interest rate derivatives. This in my view was insanity and it's tantamount to having the band play a few extra songs on the Deck of the Titanic. The shock therapy has absolutely no effect on the inevitable outcome, and if anything, it is criminal in it's intent. it has very likely lured a whole class of people into believing there is nothing to fear. To be honest with you John, I really wish I could stay with a clear mind that this is a conspiracy theory that I'm talking about. and it really isn't. What I am talking about, what I just referenced, is descriptive of what mathematically happens, or a descriptive of the life cycle of all pure fiat money systems. and people who are interested in understanding this a little more deeply, it's masterfully explain by a chap by the name of Chris Martenson. I'm sure you have probably interviewed him in the past. If you interview Chris Martenson and (go to Youtube and look up) the Crash Course, you will find a Youtube piece that he did that is about a half-hour long and it explains the life cycle of fiat money and how fiat money as it grows, and the amount of it in existence increases, due to the rate of inflation, or due to a rate of inflation that is charged on fiat money, the growth rate of fiat inflects at some point, and after it inflects, the monetary base or the amount of money in existence has to grow vertically or the whole system collapses. We inflected back in the mid-2000's and we are on part of the curve where money or credit creation has to grow vertically, geometrically, straight up or the whole system comes down. We are starting to live with, we are experiencing the manifestations of that happening. That explains a great deal of why things are seemingly why things are disjointed in our capital markets, and what we are witnessing are these massive ups and these massive downs in what are purported to be markets but what they truly are and increasingly what they have become is a playground for central banks. 5:15 where they are trying to centrally plan or centrally fix the values in what used to be free markets. They are fixing them to try and make us believe that the markets, all will be ok. and things are not ok. So that was a bit of a mouthful.

John B:

Let me ask you this, what is an interest rate derivative?

Rob K:

The two interest rate derivatives that were used to force the interest rates to "0", at the short end of the interest rate curve was a product utilized by the US Treasury, called an FRA which is a .. when I was a trader in the institutional brokerage market,, we called that a Forward Rate Agreement and what it is is a glorified bet on what three, six month or one year LIBOR was going to be at a future date. The other instrument which is used which is another interest rate derivative is called an IRS or an Interest Rate Swap and they are used to basically control and to harness, the long end or the belly of the curve basically from three out to ten years and using huge applications of both of these instruments with orders coming directly from what I would call a clandestine.

portion of the US Treasury, The Treasury has the ability to make banks the captive buyers 6:59 of any amount of debt they choose to issue and that is exactly what they have done and that is exactly what they have done because the amounts involved and the amounts of these products the banks put on in 3 month increments were so astoundingly large, especially those that had questionable credit ratings themselves, putting on these credit instruments in copious amounts in short periods of time. We know that the credit markets for instance, back in 2007 and 2008, the credit markets were frozen solid and banks were not even lending to each other on an overnight basis, and the notion that in such an environment, an institution like Morgan Stanley, who had a very poor credit rating at the time, could put on eight trillion dollars' worth of these printed instruments in a 3 month segment is a "dog that doesn't hunt".

What it exposes is the notion that an institution like Morgan Stanley was very likely insolvent at the time, and very likely being re-capitalized in a stealth manner, by doing these trades with US Treasury, an the US Treasury is the only institution on the planet that would have had the means and/or the motivation to do that amount of, call it "trading", with an institution which is known by most participants in the industry as being insolvent or failed.

So that is a reality and that did occur, and it's all recorded for posterity's sake at the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency site in the in their quarterly derivatives facts sheets, which are archived and you can go and read them for free and for your edification if you don't believe what I am saying.

This is factually what has occurred and it has served to kick the can down the road so to speak, and it's bought us a few more songs as the band plays on, but it has not cured the underlying problem and the underlying problem is we have too much bad debt in the system.

The bad debt owning from the sub-prime crisis, specifically in the mid 2000's in America, this problematic debt hasn't gone away at all and right now it has just been siloed on the balance sheet of the Federal Reserve through the generous purchases of asset backed commercial paper or mortgaged-backed securities and this has basically just served as a place to silo all this toxic debt. This toxic debt used to be on the books of the banks and if the banks were required to write that debt down to it's true worth, the capitalization of the entire banking system would have been wiped out many times over.

So the reality is, what we are being treated to is a massive shell game, and the bad debt has been moved from the shells that the banks own, and it is now under the shells that the Federal Reserve owns, and increasingly I would suggest to you that the European central banks are doing much the same thing, but this doesn't mean it's gone away, it is just hiding in a different space, and what it really does on a go forward basis is that it hinders the central bank's ability to deal with the next crisis and the next crisis is blooming right before our eyes, because with the collapse of oil prices, all of the debt that was issued to allow these high priced oil produces, the guys who produce the shale crude, the guys who produce, certainly in Canada, the guys who produce the oil sands oil, this is all very expensive stuff to produce and requires prices probably multiples of what the current price is for crude oil.

What does it mean when crude oil is only fetching 28-30 dollars a barrel, it means that companies that issued hundreds of billions of dollars of debt to produce this highly priced oil, they can't service their debt any longer and this is starting to really rear its head in the financial markets, really just in the last couple of months, and on a go-forward basis, it's going to show itself to be the true problem that it is.

The reason there has been a bit of a delay, in us seeing the true problem with this bad oil debt is that a lot of producers had hedges in place where they had sold their production forward at the higher prices and a lot of those hedges have run off or are in the midst of running off and so increasingly you are going to see producers who need $50/60 per barrel break-even to continue producing and to continue servicing their debt. They are now going to be faced head-on with getting $28-$30 per barrel which means that for every barrel they are extracting, from the methods they use, water in every barrel they produce, which means that ultimately the debt is going to fail my guess is, the central banks now have their balance sheets because they took the blow not from the write-down but they took the blow from the toxic sub-prime debt and now this is going to hinder their ability to react to the mopping up(break in transmission) .. sopping.

John B:

I tell you what we're going to do Rob (re the failing transmission) We are going to have to call you back.(14:00) We are going to call you right now the connection is getting stupid.

Rob K:

So John, I was trying to reference to you just how the Federal reserve ended up siloing the mortgage debt problem from the mid 2000's. Where these central banks, The Fed and the European Central Bank, took all this toxic sub-prime debt off the books of the banks and they put it on their balance sheets, This, on a go-forward basis, is going to hinder the Fed's and the ECB's ability to deal with the now failing crude oil debt, where all the high cost oil producers, the shale producers and the heavy oil producers who have issued copious amounts of debt, this debt is now going to start failing in full bloom and the ECB and the Fed's ability to take this debt, or paper out of the system and silo it. 15:19

There comes a point where, a sponge can only take up so much water, and the ECB and the FED can only grow their balance sheet so big before people start to lose 15:32 credibility, to lose faith in their credibility to manage their affairs properly.

What this is likely going to lead to, is a massive crisis in confidence in the central banks and in the fiat currencies themselves. and, in my view anyway John, I think we are starting to see a little bit of this show up in the precious metals markets and I think we are starting to see it in certain markets where tangibles are available to hot money looking for a safe place to park itself

John B:

You know that is amazing, I want to thank you for re-stating that because the signal got a bit wobbly and I wanted to make sure that everybody could get all that. Here is the thing that amazes me Rob, you live in this world. Now you talk about this stuff like you are talking about trimming the rose bushes here and I'm going this is so extraordinarily complex. So I have a real lay person's question for you, just because you silo all this bad debt, you take it off your books, here let's put it over there. But it still exists! I mean, what becomes of the siloed liabilities. do they ever get dealt with or does somebody get thrown in the weeds so to speak? As far as their investment, they just take their losses and forget about it, sorry, it was a bad deal? What eventually happens to the siloed liabilities. Is it ever dealt with? (17:13)

Rob K:

In theory John the bad mortgage debt that the Fed has on its books, at some point the mortgages will mature and then the debt is supposed to either be repaid or written off. At some point down the road, the FED or someone is going to have to reconcile that paper they have on their books that says it is worth, if you have a piece of paper that says it is worth five million and you're carrying it on your books at five Million, and it matures, and you are not getting repaid the five Million, at that point you either write it off and say OK it didn't get five million worth, it got zero, and you make an accounting entry, that means that your capital has just decreased by five million, or maybe John, you just don't have accounting and maybe you just carry on like nothing happened.

John B:

Or maybe you just go out of business.

Rob K:

No, if you have no accounting, no one really knows your true financial condition. Period! There is a law in place in the United States, that says that, boy who is it exactly? It used to be that only the President of the United States could grant this waiver but in the last ten years or so, the ability to grant this waiver has been extended to the chief intelligence operative designated by the President. What this law says, that if a publicly traded company is deemed to be in the National Interest of the United States of America, they can be excused from reporting their true financial condition and can effectively keep two sets of books and lie about the state of their financial condition. Between you and me John, there is absolutely no doubt in my mind, that during the financial crisis of 2007 and 2008, this waiver was absolutely in play, and certainly there were financial institutions, in America that were being granted that waiver who were very likely insolvent. There were very likely big household name institutions that were insolvent but they were granted a waiver where they didn't have to declare their true financial condition and effectively they lied to the world about their true financial state. This was to allow the Fed and the US Treasury to institute this monetary shock therapy to re-capitalize some of these institutions that were subject to electro-shock therapy them back into some sort of "Weekend At Bernie's" kind of appearance of health. This has occurred 20:35 and there is absolutely no doubt that this has occurred and you see the entrails of it, as I referenced earlier, when you examine the reporting, specifically the derivatives reporting and the quarterly derivatives reports published by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

John B:

I don't mean to be a moron here just to use a really scientific term, but how long can you conceal this diseased part of your company, how long can you keep this quarantined off the books, doesn't it eventually have to be dealt with?

Rob K:

Well it is being dealt with John and the way it is being dealt with, you see foreigners understand that the economic reporting that is coming out of America, is disingenuous and it's inaccurate and it is a travesty and it constitutes high financial crimes against humanity. This is why countries like China, like Russia, like India and the BRICS nations, are building parallel structures to the IMF, to the World Bank, because they are actively and consciously making provisions for a world without the Dollar as the world's settlement currency. There is no other way to explain them creating parallel institutions to the IMF and the WORLD Bank if they're not planning for a world without the Dollar. So these sovereign nations, they are very aware of what's been committed by the Anglo American banking establishment It hasn't been sitting well with them for a very long time and to be honest with you John, this is truly at the root of so much of the world's political instability and so much of the tension in the world is really, when you boil it right down, it's really about they don't trust the money anymore; they don't trust the guys who have been very poor stewards of the world currency.

The world's reserve currency is basically the way we measure worth. It is how we denominate what labor is worth. It ultimately all comes back, it has for quite a number of years, it's all come back to the US

Dollar. When you see that people have committed atrocities in this area, it doesn't make you sit well and it doesn't make you feel good about selling the output of your country's labor and the bounty of your country's national resources, to be selling it to a bunch of yahoo's who created money out of thin air, who think that all they have to do to live is to print money when you have to work for your money. You see China can't print Dollars. America prints Dollars and buys what China will sell and China has to work to create the goods and they're compensated in dollars. I mean they get compensated in Yuan but I mean ultimately America is paying for these things in Dollars because that is the world's reserve currency so far, but you know, when someone prints and somebody else works, that's not a fair exchange and the whole world has woken up to the notion that that is what America has been doing for a very long time.

John B:

And so fiat system or not, if there had been some ethics applied, to our business dealings, Rob what this sounds like is that there has been so much corruption, now trust is broken, and people are looking to these countries around the world

Rob K:

Yes John, but let's back up because you just mentioned if some discipline had been applied, to the fiat system, if it had been managed properly. Well the funny thing is John, what makes money creators disciplined is an application of a thing called the Gold Standard. And a Gold Standard means that you can't print more money than you have gold. or that there is a symbiotic relationship between the amount of money created and the amount of gold that you have and that is the discipline. 25:52

That is the exact discipline that the people who have the ability to create money, they shunned that and got rid of that because that wasn't consistent with them playing god and then creating money out of thin air and trying to remake the world in their view. So you know, when you talk about discipline, gold is discipline. The Gold Standard is discipline and that is exactly what the Keynesian minded people who run our current financial system, that's exactly what they don't want to become entangled in or governed by. They don't want discipline. they want the ability to continue to print and to act like God! 26:34

John B:

That's the long and short of it isn't it? They don't want the discipline, they don't want the restraint,

Rob K:

John! John! If I give you the job of God for two weeks, at the end of two weeks I don't think you are going to want to give it up. There is something about absolute power that absolutely corrupts and when people have absolute power, they don't want to give it up. 27:13

John B:

Well the next question is how do you shift these characters out of their positions of power? Or is it even possible? Or does the whole thing have to fall down like we got rid of them alright, they destroyed the world and they are down there at the bottom of that pile of rubble there.

Rob K:

Well the system as we know it John is falling down right before our eyes, and this is evidenced by the light by the likes of Iran selling their oil to China not for Dollars but Yuan and the likes of Russia selling their crude oil not for dollars to China but for Yuan. The likes of Venezuela selling their oil to China, not for Dollars but for Yuan, These kind of trade agreements where Dollars are being squeezed out of the settlement mechanism, these deals are flourishing, they are growing in size, and they're growing in numbers of participants around the world that are aggressively and continually making plans to conduct trade in other than Dollars. So the Dollar's days of being the prime currency for all trade, I'm going to say are probably quite numbered because so much of the mechanism in place today is being converted away from Dollar settlement to other currencies. This is something I expect to gain speed and numbers of countries participating in other than Dollar settlement as we move forward. So the Dollar is collapsing in front of us.

John B:

So the Dollar is collapsing in front of us.

Rob K:

Yes it is. And the notion, and I know my words don't necessarily match what we've seen on the foreign exchange markets where the US Dollar Index has been rising in value against a basket of international currencies over the past, let's call it year and a bit, the US Dollar Index has risen from the low 80's into the high 90's, that has the appearance of, or gives the appearance that the Dollar is strong but the reality is John that foreign countries have been selling and/or dumping their US Dollar reserve holdings. This is empirically accurate. These numbers are given to us by the US Treasury itself that the amount of Dollar reserves held by foreign governments has been decreasing which means they have been selling their US Government bonds, they have been exiting the Dollar.

This brings up another issue in that, who has been buying the US Government securities that foreign countries have been pitching? My work in that area tells me that it is a clandestine wing of the US Treasury called the Exchange Stabilization Fund and this fund inside the US Treasury, is basically a massive black box. It is very likely the most powerful financial entity on the planet. It was created by an act of Congress in 1934; It is accountable to nobody, produces no financials, and this entity has unthinkable off-book wealth at its disposal. In my view, there is no other counter-party in the world that could have taken up close to a trillion dollars which foreign governments have sold in US Government securities. They have been taken up by somebody and it's not the banks and it's not the hedge funds so who does that leave? It leaves some player that has unquestionable or unthinkable amounts of resources at its disposal. That to me is a dictionary definition of what the Exchange Stabilization Fund is.

I would recommend that all of your listeners go to a website called www.marketskeptics.com It's a site that was created by a chap by the name of Eric deCarbonnel and on the right hand portion of his home page, there is a reference to a Youtube montage that he created, it's called "Something That I Have Been Afraid To Blog About", the Exchange Stabilization Fund. It is a five part Youtube series and I would recommend everybody watch it and watch it more than once. It is informative and it explains to you the interaction of the Exchange Stabilization Fund, the secret, clandestine entity inside the US Treasury and its relationship with the Federal Reserve and how it operates in markets. What we've seen over the last year with the Dollar getting stronger, as foreign governments have been dumping dollars, you see the narrative of the strong Dollar isn't consistent with foreign governments empirically getting rid of Dollars. When you watch this montage on the Exchange Stabilization Fund, you can start connecting dots and it makes sense how this could have happened. What player in the world has a trillion dollars at its disposal to buy US Government bonds when the world is getting rid of them?

I've got to ask you a question John. If I ask you to take something that's gray and has big floppy ears, and a tail and a trunk, what am I asking you to think about?

John B:

An elephant!

Rob K:

Notice how I never used the word "elephant". I gave you a descriptive analysis. The descriptive, given what we know, that some entity bought a trillion Dollars' worth of US Government securities in the last year, as countries around the world were getting rid of them. We know it is not the banks. Anyway, I'm giving you a descriptive of the only entity on the planet that can do it and that is the Exchange Stabilization Fund. I think if the people watch the montage on the Exchange Stabilization Fund, at marketskeptics.com, the Youtube series, I think it will become very clear to them that the only institution on the planet that could have the heft and the ability, the means and the motive to do that kind of buying of US Government securities, is the Exchange Stabilization Fund. Because John, as I said, that fund was created in 1934, its mission statement is to basically to ensure that the Dollar, the perpetuation of the Dollar as the settlement currency for the world.

(35:25) (Rob explains where to find the series to John. The title to the series is: "Something I've Been Afraid To Blog About".) Do click on that and do watch it, it's extremely eye opening.

Rob K:

Well Eric deCarbonnel is a very interesting fellow, His great grandfather was a chap by the name of Frank Vanderlip, and Frank Vanderlip was one of the framers of the Federal Reserve Act. He was one of the original Jeckyll Island participants, where the cast of the rich and famous met on Jeckyll Island secretly and drew up the framework for the central bank of the United States.

Understand that the Federal Reserve, for those who don't know, the Federal Reserve is not Federal. It is no more Federal than Federal Express. America had experience with trying a central bank before the Fed came into existence and it was an unmitigated disaster when America tried to have a central bank in the past. Americans did not want a central bank, a privately owned central bank. and the bankers knew this but the bankers were determined that America would be brought to its knees by a central bank and that is why they framed it and named it the Federal Reserve because it is not Federal, and they don't have any reserves, and it's a private company that is owned by banks. This is the way they sold it to the American People and passed it into law on Christmas Eve in 1913 when the US House and Senate were virtually empty and it was hustled through. Everything about this institution, everything about the way it is managed and everything about the way it came into existence, it just reeks with, I mean you want to talk about conspiracy John. The formation of the Federal Reserve and how it came into being, it reeks of impropriety, and it reeks of conspiracy and you know that is just on the record!

When do you call something Federal? Most people in America believe that the Federal Reserve is part of the Federal Government.

End Tape1 (38:56)

Continue on Tape 2

And you know what's interesting, I worked in the institutional markets for a good 18 years and I thought that the Fed was part of the US Government too! Shows you what I knew.

John B:

All right what happened with Gold yesterday? Or last week rather, it had a nice big spike and now it's starting to settle down again.

Rob K:

Well I would suggest to you that the gold spike we saw last week, very likely the thin edge of the wedge of a whole lot that's very likely to come in the very near future. The Achilles Heel of the financial system John, making, at least on the part of officialdom, to keep us believing in the power of the Dollar, it's alternatives have to be made to look lesser, or to look as not good alternatives In that sense John, gold has often been referred to as the canary in the coal mine and the rising price of gold is basically a report card back to the central banks that they have failed and central banks are not in the job of having failed report cards, so they have to make the alternatives to their fiat money look poor. And the way they do this is they go to exchanges like the COMEX exchange and for every ounce of gold that they claim to have in their inventories, currently they sell something on the magnitude of 540 ounces in paper form and they call this legitimate price discovery. Well you know what, you can't sell 540 ounces of anything real for every ounce that you own and claim that it's legitimate price discovery.

What we're witnessing John, increasingly so and it is becoming very in-your-face that there is a war on between paper gold and physical gold and the emerging economies and the Chinese, the Russians and the Indians, they are not interested in purchasing paper gold, or promises of gold. They want the real ounces and increasingly the West is having trouble providing the real ounces to justify their paper price. So what we're starting to witness here, I think in real time, we're starting to see a great unraveling of the paper exchanges where a fraudulent price of precious metals has been conveyed to the public for a very long time. Just understand that these paper prices that are generated on these exchanges are a fraudulent inducement to get people who produce the real good, to part with it an artificially low price. It's worked for a very long time but lo and behold John, it was just a couple of weeks ago we saw, let's just say we saw a wobbler in the Silver Fix in London England where the market price of silver was trading at a value of X and lo and behold, they had the official fixing something like eighty cents under where the market was at the time of the fix. What this is symptomatic of is somebody had a big paper position and was getting crucified and needed to get out and they had a fraudulent fix. So fraudulent that the world's biggest silver producer lodged a complaint with the London Bullion Market Association basically saying we demand an answer how you guys were supposed to be people who bring us transparent price discovery, how is it that, It is sort of like someone saying to you like someone standing up in front of you and saying they have got new Cadillacs to go for $800. Everyone knows that Cadillacs aren't $800 bucks and that is the equivalent of what happened. on the London Bullion Market Association. So they stole a bunch of silver from guys for a price that it should have never sold for, and now the people who produce it are now pissed because they are stake holders and they are getting robbed, in plain view! It's not even, you see these clandestine robberies used to occur in the back-rooms, used to occur where prices were taken down on exchanges but now we have graduated to a new level, to a heightened level of larceny where the stealing has come out in full view. The reason it has come out in full view John is because the players who have conducted the dirt, are getting desperate. We are seeing desperate acts and this tells me John that we are getting very close to probably some sort of a major re-set in the Dollar and probably a major major reset in the value of precious metals as we know it.

John B: This is just so weird, I am listening to your words and I'm trying... you know it's just not easy to read the future even with your built-in crystal ball. .. John B. talks about gas at $1.399 ... I keep wondering and keep trying to figure out what is this going to feel like, and look like. I just can't imagine what the effects are going to be of this next big re-set, certainly it will be the biggest re-set that the economic, in the history of economy, it will be the re-set with the biggest effect but I just cannot figure out what it is exactly going to look like.

Rob K:

You know what John, if you want a little hint of what things might look like, why don't you just take a good look around you, and look at, look at what has been constructed around everyday Americans in the form of the police state, look at the laws that have been passed: the Patriot Act which has nothing to do with patriotism, the John Warner Defense Authorization Act, the creation of Homeland Security, which is something in itself which is right out of 1930's Germany, the Brown-shirts and Homeland Security. I think that is what they even called it in Germany "Homeland Security". A police state apparatus has been erected in America while America has gone on sleeping. The harvesting of civil liberties, the revocation of Habeas Corpus, the central plank of the Magna Carta, where basic human rights were granted to people in the 12th century, Somebody by the name of George W. Bush saw fit to re-write that himself with an executive order, coming from a pen! This is the sort of stuff that allows you legal representation when you are charged with something or snatched off the street. Isn't it funny, you even listen to the American National Anthem where they talk about the land of the brave and the home of the free. America is no longer the home of the free. American authorities now have the right, or so they claim, by use of their own executive orders, they have the right, so they claim, to snatch you off the street, throw you in a dungeon, you don't get to make a phone call to a lawyer and they can hold you as long as they want. If anyone inquires as to your whereabouts, they say it's legal for them to say they don't even know what you are talking about. Is that really the home of the free John?

John B:

No. No it's not and you know we see what happens when people try to push back though I think that thing in Burns Oregon could have used an event planner to maybe work things out a little bit smoother, definitely but, what we saw happen to Robert Finicum was just a government assassination Rob K: it was an execution. John B: that's exactly what it was and this may seem a little far afield but I'm looking at the response and mostly from the gay left, and this personifies their entire agenda They are the most vial, hateful and vitriolic bunch of losers on the face of this planet and the so-called right, as far as I'm concerned, is no better than they. At least ... (John B goes on about Washington Conservatives coddling 50:30) - rant continues... That's the stupidity of the left, they mindlessly and blindly allow these mechanisms to be created and they are so stupid they don't know that eventually these mechanisms are going to turn on them... it's just amazing to watch the same old story, the same old components, money, vice and the politics that allows it, these things to take on a life of their own... (John B rant continues) she's at the forefront of the strong cities network, which is effectively calling upon the UN to run our cities over here! This Barack Obama character, the word is now that Loretta Lynch is his top pick to replace Justice Scalia on the Supreme Court. Well this country already runs like a sub-Saharan African Republic as it is, combined with some good old Chicago style gangster style politics. Either you go along with it or we throw you in the weeds. That's all.

Rob K: Here here!

But that's right out of the play book of Mr. Obama's mentors, the Bill Ayers crowd. These people have written papers of and it is well documented, how they want to govern and would have America governed given the chance. And where they talk about the education camps, and where they talk about how not everybody in America would buy into their view of what America should be and they talk about openly, you can listen to them talk about it, how they would deal with the people who wouldn't go along and they talk about that some of them would be re-educated and others we would just have to get rid of. They openly talk about the notion of how they would liquidate 25 Million people because they reckon that is how big the problem will be if they were to basically bring full-fledged communism, or their brand of socialism to America.

The likely outcome of it would be that they would need to off about 25 Million people. and to sit around and listen to people talking in very very plain and clear voices about how they would need to off about 25 Million Americans. This is the sort of thing a lot of people have trouble believing. This is the sort of thing where people say, when confronted with this reality, people say, I don't want to hear that, I don't want to live in a world like that, Well you know John the reality is that we are being put into this knock-box whether we like it or not and people have collectively been asleep at the switch, for far too long. This is another reason why John, I used to carry a political card of my own, but I've abandoned the notion of holding a political card in a wallet of any description because I can't really see any difference between the two sides. The left and the right, to me it's just a big morass and they all seem to be answering ultimately to the same power. I call it "the powers that be", and it basically has a strong world government overtone to it, and they all seem to rally around that. That seems to be the intent of most of what I see out of any mainstream party whether it's left or right.

John B:

(After socio-political rant - 19:58 segment 2). So Rob what can we expect in the ultimately dystopian future? They just make sport of hunting down people? Any beyond any doubt proclaim their allegiance to this insane progressive agenda. It's like "our pass-time is putting you people in the Coliseum". Because that's exactly what it sounds like....

Rob K:

You asked what do I see going forward, I see more of the same, I see what we're currently witnessing, I see it happening at an increasing pace, and I look at the acts that are going to be committed, are going to become more extreme. Just as I referenced how the institutionalized systemic stealing in plain view in our capital markets used to be done in the back rooms used to be done under the rug, now they are fornicating on top of the rung and things are being ripped off hiding in plain view. It's no longer a secret, it's no longer the dirty secret that only a few people knew about. It's now in your face and it's right in your grill. So how do I see things going forward? Well we're starting to see, at least some vestiges of stakeholders put their hands up and say no more. And my feeling is these stakeholders will first try the legal system as what it is, whether the legal system really is a legal system anymore, I don't know because I think all it really does is because it enables the status quo to continue its harvest because, what it really comes down to me is, when you look at a country like America, and you look at the claims that America has against Edward Snowden, what he is alleged to have done, and how damaging what he did is alleged to be against US National Security, and then you have people on the left in particular, and on the right but I just call it the blend.

Asking for this man's life and for his head, and what he has done in terms of the possibility of compromising National Security pales in comparison to what Hillary Clinton has done with her email server and the leaks and the susceptibility to hack, that her private email server was, it makes a mockery of the whole US Legal System. It makes a mockery of the NSA; it makes a mockery of the whole US Intelligence establishment, and their wanton disregard for the security of America. It is all a joke, it is a complete utter joke. Edward Snowden is the bad guy but Hillary commits bigger crimes and what does that get her? Front runner status for the Democratic Leadership. I mean it's ridiculous. How many Americans can actually sit with a straight face, knowing the treatment that Edward Snowden has been treated to and then look at Hillary Clinton. How can America sit with a straight face and tell the rest of the world, that they're the home of the free and they stand for anything?

John B:

I really don't know what has happened here Rob, I don't. It's almost supernatural in its scope. Well let me ask you this, in closing what is your message to the world if you could. That's a bit of a tall one if you could tell, you're going to come back, I certainly hope you will, but as far as today is concerned, 15 February 2016, what is your message?

Rob K:

My message is get real, get real and pay attention. Wake up! I guess the message is we have all been lied to. We've grown up believing in leadership, we've grown up believing in the way we were raised, our way of life, my view is the world we are currently living in isn't the world I grew up in and things have changed. Unfortunately John they have changed for the worst, and I don't think it is constructive for humanity to sit back and say that things are the same, or things are the same as they used to be. I refuse to abandon my upbringing. I think the most valuable thing I ever had in my upbringing was I was taught the difference between right and wrong and today in this world I see a lot of wrong. I think it is a very very sad thing that when there is wrong, people ignore it and refuse to call it out for what it is. The transgressions that we have all been subject to, at the hand of leadership, it's a disgrace, and you know what, these people all need to be kept in line and people need to speak out and be honest about our surroundings and where we are headed. Because if we don't, we are not just failing ourselves, we are failing our kids, and our kid's kids and you know what, they are the future. So we are talking about our legacy. and our legacy will only be what we make it. Burying our head in the sand and refusing to admit where we are, is not a very healthy way to think about things going forward.

John B:

I am enjoying our talk. I wish the subject matter was a little happier, but maybe it will be at some point. I would say we have got a fight on our hands. It just hasn't started. The rumblings of the rumble have started but the rumble itself has not. I want to stay in close touch with you as we move toward what is in my opinion inevitable. This is not going to go away softly and everybody is just going to be left alone because the god they don't believe in, just thinks they want to be happy. Yea?? well the only thing that is going to do that is some good old government issued pharmaceuticals, and if they have their way, all of us will be, in fact THX 1138 style, we'll be forced to take those drugs or they will just get rid of us, watch and see. I would hate to think that that is the future that waits but believe that is the future that potentially waits for us because once things get rolling on the evil side of things, evil doesn't decide well I've been evil long enough, I think I will lighten up and make a wonderful beneficial society with rulership that is magnificent and benefits for all. That's not what happens. Evil starts rolling and it keeps rolling and just gets worse, it doesn't get better. I don't think it is depressing to talk about these things Rob, I think it's inspirational. We're on a short time line here folks, I think we better do what Rob said and Wake Up!. That's what we are trying to do and I know you're trying to wake people up.

Rob K:

John knowledge is power. I certainly find enlightenment to be very empowering

John B:

Indeed sir, and when people go to KirbyAnalytics.com what will they find?

Rob K:

They will find an archive of my material, I probably have 900 pieces in the public domain John, and I communicate with my subscribership by direct email.

John B:

Until we meet again, it was great having you on the program; it was good talking with you again.

Rob K:

My pleasure John; be good.
